

It's crazy to think that at the beginning of the semester, I knew almost nothing about certain aspects of writing such as multimodality and frameworks. In addition, the idea of having to do multiple drafts for one assignment seemed unnecessary at first, but now that I look back, it was easily one of the best ways I could improve my writing. Throughout each draft, I've received feedback on certain aspects of my work, such as what I should and shouldn't include. During this process for each of the major assignments, I've slowly but steadily started to adapt to the concepts of the assignments, all while preserving and showing my own unique writing style. I think that it's very important for people to keep an open mind when it comes to writing, because receiving tips on how to improve as a writer and applying those tips is one of, if not the best way to adapt to the writing process.