

Decision making has easily been one of my main struggles when it comes to writing. Even to this day, deciding what to write about is difficult and time-consuming for me. This is mainly because there can be such a wide range of topics to choose from that it becomes overwhelming. Some people might feel differently about this than me, but I don't like having too many options to choose from when it comes to writing. I would rather have a smaller lists that way I can spend more time actually writing and getting my work done. Despite this decision being difficult for the first two major assignments, I was eventually able to select topics I ended up being very satisfied with, because I remember looking back on them and remembering how much they've impacted me as I got older. Even though decisions in literature are hard to make, the end result is always worth it because that's how people grow in their literacy journeys.