Dear Reader,

Some of the main questions I'm trying to ask and answer in my writing are: How impactful can music be on someone's perception of literature? and Why is it so important to recognize multiple modes of literature?

My main goals as a writer are to get better when it comes to multimodal projects and to get better at analyzing other modes of literature.

As of now, I've completed the analysis of one of my artifacts, which is a song. Throughout the process so far, I've learned more about using multiple methods to analyze literature and about using different kinds of artifacts in my analyses.

For the song, I've looked at the lyrics and I've picked out some of the lyrics that had the biggest impact on me. I wanted to make sure that these lyrics related to me personally in some capacity as well.

I need to get more comfortable with analyzing another type of artifact and I need to be sure that I plan out my writing. carefully

My peer reviewer can best help me by seeing where I struggled previously and by telling me what I should and shouldn't do next time. In addition, my peer reviewer can benefit my writing by trying to understand my style and telling me how I could still use it and at the same time meet the requirements for the assignment.

Sincerely,

Jack Doerfler
